Subject: Appropriations to Higher Education in 21 States in Selected Years from 1929-30 to 1959-60.

Attached is the annual tabulation of the state appropriations and enrollments in public-supported higher education to twenty-one states, including Michigan. The single basis for selection of the states to be included continues to be the availability of comparable data.

The data support the following conclusions:

I. Total State-Supported Higher Education

A. The total appropriation to higher education in the State of Michigan has increased at a faster rate than has the average total appropriation in the other 20 states.

Per Cent of Increase in Total Appropriations to Higher Education

	29-30 to 59-60	39-40 to 59-60	58-59 to 59-60
20 States	763%	858%	13%
Michigan	878%	950%	16%

B. Except for the current year, the total enrollment in state-supported higher education has increased at a faster rate in the State of Michigan than it has in other states.

Per Cent of Increase in Enrollment in Higher Education

	29-30 to 59-60	39-40 to 59-60	58-59 to 59-60
20 States	199%	123%	5%
Michigan	377%	231%	4%

C. Except for the current year, the average appropriation to higher education per each student enrolled, in terms of a constant dollar (the dollars adjusted to eliminate any variations caused by changes in the cost of living), is increasing at a faster rate in other states than it is increasing in the State of Michigan.

Per Cent of Increase in the Average Appropriation Per Student Enrolled in State-Supported Higher Education

	29-30 to 59-60	39-40 to 59-60	58-59 to 59-60
20 States	69%	106%	8%
Michigan	20%	43%	12%

D. Among the 21 states, Michigan ranks 10th in 1959-60 in the number of dollars appropriated per student enrolled in public-supported higher education.

III. Summary

While admittedly quite crude, and certainly not an entirely adequate base for firm conclusions, the most important factors in these tabulations continue to be the average appropriations per student. These averages measure the amount of money available to educate the average student. An increase in appropriations, to have effect in the improvement or expansion of the educational program, must be of greater proportional magnitude than the increase in enrollment. As the information presented indicates, other states have been increasing the support of their state universities and of their entire programs of higher education at a faster rate than has the State of Michigan.

As may be seen in sub-sections E, under both sections I and II, the Michigan taxpayer receives a real "bargain" in his "purchase" of higher education for the young men and women of the State. The South Dakota taxpayer pays approximately ten times as much for the same "product," i.e. one year's education for one student at an institution of higher education, and the Montana taxpayer pays fifteen times as much. For the training of a student at his state university, the Iowa taxpayer pays approximately three times as much as does his Michigan counterpart, and the Montana taxpayer pays eight times as much.

These wide ranges of costs to the taxpayers of the various states may be seen to represent an even wider difference in value received for tax dollar when one considers that, in Michigan, for his contribution of 19¢ per 1,000 students at the state university, the Michigan taxpayer receives one year's education for 400 graduate and graduate-professional students, inlcuding lawyers, physicians, dentists, Ph.D.s, and one year's education for 600 undergraduates. In contrast, the taxpayer in Montana, for his contribution of $1.57, or the taxpayer in Rhode Island, with his contribution of $1.48, does not receive any education for a single physician, not a single dentist, and less than 100 graduate or graduate-professional students out of the 1,000 that this contribution supports.

If the Michigan taxpayer would substantially increase his contribution to the education of each student in the public-supported institutions of higher education in Michigan, perhaps by two or three times, he would still be paying a low price for high quality in comparison with other states for the production of each Michigan college graduate.
